Many Ways to Connect

Dear Friends,

We are happy to share in this issue an excerpt from oral teachings given by Geshe Tenzin Wangyal Rinpoche in 2012 on the “Tibetan Yogas of Body, Speech, and Mind.” These truly exceptional teachings were given over a weekend retreat in Pacific Palisades, Calif., and are available as an edited transcript. We’d like to thank Rinpoche for his clear, detailed explanations of the Three Doors and Three Refuges. Thanks also to a great team that worked to make this transcript come into being: Ken Okuno for his recording work, Jane Goe and Mark Hammons for their transcribing work, Marcy Vaughn for editing the transcript, Mary Ellen McCourt for text and cover design, and Bob Anger for coordinating the retreat.

Be sure to check out all the latest news and happenings featured in this issue:

These are just a few of the numerous and varied opportunities available to connect to the Bon Buddhist teachings—simply amazing and wonderful. Rinpoche’s webcasts and Internet teachings are reaching many people who are unable to make it to retreats. Inspiring to us is the number of people working together in countless ways to help bring the wisdom of this great Bon tradition to such wide audiences around the world, and we continue to enjoy our small role in sharing some of that wisdom here in Voice of Clear Light. Emaho!

Three Doors and Three Refuges

An Excerpt from the Edited Transcript of Oral Teachings Given by Tenzin Wangyal Rinpoche on the ‘Tibetan Yogas of Body, Speech, and Mind,’ February 2012

We speak of the three doors and three refuges. The stillness of the body is the door; it is not the place of refuge. We say the silence of speech is the door, not the refuge, and the spaciousness of the mind or the heart is the door, but not the refuge. The refuge is the unbounded space, infinite awareness and genuine warmth, or the body of emptiness, body of light, body of great bliss. Does that make sense, that distinction? The expression “the door” means it’s gross, it’s approachable, it’s easier, and then through that door is the refuge itself. Sometimes we might not feel a deep sense of that space. When you really feel that deep sense of the space, then everything changes. Maybe we don’t feel the depth of the space, but by trying to connect with the stillness, we feel closer. So that’s why it’s referred to as a door.

For example, in the second refuge we say, “I take refuge in this body of light, in the infinite awareness.” Awareness is a state of mind, a state of consciousness, and it’s not just awareness, it’s awareness of that unbounded space. It’s not awareness of a flower, awareness of food, awareness of, I don’t know, a cup, awareness of evil, awareness of pain. It’s none of that. It’s awareness of only one thing—unbounded space. That makes a big difference.

In order to have that state of mind, mind has to be clear. Mind has to be clear in order to be aware of unbounded space. The silence helps to achieve that depth of connection. So silence becomes the door for that. “Silence” is the sense of inner silence, where there is not so much chattering. If there is a lot of chattering, then forget about infinite awareness. When I try to enter through the door, it means I’m trying to listen to this inner silence, but what I’m doing is I’m listening to the chattering voice and saying, “I hate this voice, I hate this thought. When am I going to stop thinking!”

When you speak to yourself like that, then you’re still thinking. This constant thought is about not thinking, but it’s still thought. If this chain goes on, then there is no way of having that infinite awareness, that light, or knowing the sacred space. You cannot know the sacred space when you are completely caught up with those voices. There's no way. So in order to know, it's through the door of the silence. I say to people that the door of silence is listening to the silence. They never think about listening to the silence; they always think about listening to the voice. If you listen to the silence, you hear silence. If you listen to the voice, you hear the voice. If you listen to the noise, you hear noise.

When was the last time you had a problem with the noise? What? Today? Okay. And did you notice that you were really listening to that? How many people did not have a problem with the noise today? Okay. Did you notice that you were not listening to the noise? When you listen to it, you hear it. If you listen to the silence inside, you'll hear the silence. So not only do you hear the silence, the most beautiful thing is that the moment you hear the silence, the noise stops. The moment the noise stops, you feel more connection to that awareness, because our awareness can only emerge when the noise is not there, and therefore it becomes a door. Does that make sense?

These are some technical things, but there is a particular logic here. I think in some sense it's wonderful, it's so rich in tradition, so there is depth for this. Of course, sometimes it takes a little energy to learn these things, to make some connection, some understanding—this is connected there, that is connected here, this makes sense because of that; that makes sense because of this. It's always in the same territory, which is the absolutely necessary territory. It's not about long stories. It's not a long story, it's a short story, but it's a necessary story. So that's why it is called a door.

And the third door is where we talk about how the spaciousness of the heart and mind brings the feeling of that warmth. You can never feel the warmth unless you feel the space. The warmth always comes with the space. When you don't feel the warmth, try to feel the space. There's the example of the sky. When you look at the sky, it immediately helps you feel some space.

So three doors, three refuges. When you don't find the refuge, pay attention to the door. In the place of the term "door" sometimes we say three pills.

One way to say it is that a door is an easier way into where you are trying to get. There's the destination, and the door. The door is supposed to be an easier way to enter where you are trying to get. The inner refuge is a much higher quality, a higher place. A higher place means unbounded space. There are no conditions there. The moment you get closer to that, everything dissolves. That kind of place is the inner refuge. When you don't have access to that, what disallows us from that is the old movement, like the pain body or pain speech. These are activities that interfere with being in that space. So mind is trying to find a way to it, trying to find a way to that inner refuge.

One way to find it is in keeping our body still. “The stillness of the body is the door” means it’s easy to do if you remember to do it. Be still. When you’re very shaky, just be still, sit down. If they are shaky, immediately you try to hold somebody, make somebody sit down in a more stable place. We try to do that, right? That’s all it is. That is like zhine practice, when that stillness helps you to calm down, calm down, calm down, and gradually opens like a door to that space. During the meditation, that’s what happens.

So that’s the meaning of the door. The stillness of the body is very easy to do, easy to feel. But the stillness of unbounded space is not that easy to feel. It’s completely different. It is the unshakable stillness. The body is shakable stillness. Unbounded space is unshakable stillness. That’s the difference. That’s why one becomes the door and the other becomes the destination. Does that make sense?

The word “unbounded” means everything here—unbounded and unconditioned. Every condition dissolves here. To feel this inner stillness, if you don’t have access to this inner stillness, trying to be still in the body helps you. That is why it’s a door; it helps you to enter into the unbounded space. That’s the understanding of door. It’s the same thing when I refer to “silence.” Chattering thoughts are the obscuration of being aware, of being conscious. Silence helps to enter into the awareness of the unbounded spaciousness. That’s why when you have obstacles, you listen to the silence and you hear the silence, and it helps you to enter into that clarity of mind. That’s why silence is called a door.

Tenzin Wangyal Rinpoche Honored with Wisdom Award

Rinpoche Recognized for Efforts to Keep Tibetan Bon Buddhist Tradition Alive

Geshe Tenzin Wangyal Rinpoche, founder and spiritual director of Ligmincha Institute, received the second annual Wisdom Fellowship award from the Sacred Fire Foundation on Aug. 17. The award honors and supports elders around the world who have dedicated their lives to bringing wisdom, leadership and learning to their communities and their peoples.

Rinpoche was recognized for the important work he continues to do to keep the Tibetan Bon Buddhist tradition alive in the world. The award was presented at the Sacred Fire Foundation's Ancient Wisdom Rising, a weekend of teachings, stories and ceremonies to connect participants with nature and spirit, at Blue Deer Center near Margaretville, N.Y.

"We are giving out our second Wisdom Fellowship award this year to Rinpoche because we believe that the ever-important work he continues to do for his people, and for the people of the world, is of vital importance and sets the high standard we seek to honor and to promote with this Fellowship program," said Sofia Arroyo, Grants and Partners Director.

Recognized as one of the first to bring the Bon Buddhist teachings to the West, Tenzin Wangyal Rinpoche is an acclaimed author and highly respected and beloved teacher of the Bon tradition for students throughout the United States, Mexico and Europe. He is renowned for his depth of wisdom; his clear, engaging teaching style; and his ability to make the ancient Tibetan teachings highly accessible and relevant to the lives of Westerners.

Arroyo noted that Rinpoche continues his dedicated efforts to preserve the Bon Buddhist tradition "through establishing centers and groups worldwide, through translating and publishing texts, and through teaching Bon as an authentic, living tradition to Western students around the world."

In accepting the award, Rinpoche said, "It is very important what you are doing. As far as people who are interested in learning, it's a nice way of coming to one place and hearing about many different traditions together." He added, "In the world, we need more openness and collaboration among different spiritual traditions and elders. The Sacred Fire Foundation is a unique place bringing elders together to share their wisdom traditions."

The Sacred Fire Foundation, with headquarters in Santa Monica, Calif., supports initiatives that help people discover the sacred, interconnected nature of life, a perspective held by indigenous peoples and spiritual traditions everywhere. The 2012 Wisdom Fellowship Award recipient was Oren R. Lyons, a traditional faith keeper of the Turtle Clan of the Onondaga Nation who sits on the Onondaga Council of Chiefs.

Trul Khor Training: Oct. 31–Nov. 3, 2013, at Serenity Ridge

Advancing in the Training: Tibetan Bon Yoga, Part 3, with Alejandro Chaoul-Reich

For those who have done Parts 1 and 2 of the Tibetan Bon yoga as taught at Ligmincha Institute's Serenity Ridge Retreat Center and Chamma Ling Colorado Retreat Center since 2009, we will be continuing with the training this November and completing it next year.

Come and renew or continue your training in the ancient practice of yoga (trul khor) from the Bon Buddhist tradition of Tibet as you explore the body's energetic dimensions and integrate the practice with everyday life.

Alejandro Chaoul-Reich will conduct the training on the contemplative physical movements of Tibetan Bon yoga, which enable participants to enter all three doors (body, speech/energy and mind) at once through a single practice and to deepen their connection to the inner refuge.

As participants move into the completion part of the training (parts 3 and 4), Part 3 will focus on polishing what was learned in the first two parts, strengthening preparatory breathing, deepening our meditative movements (tsa lung) to include inner and secret aspects, and expanding yoga practice with new sets of movements from the ancient oral tradition of the Zhang Zhung. Part 4, the completion, will take place in 2014, with Tenzin Rinpoche giving a talk to the group, either in person or by webcast.

The Five Warrior Syllables with John Jackson

Two ‘Firsts’ for Ligmincha at Special Dzogchen Winter Retreat

Join Tenzin Rinpoche Dec. 27, 2013–Jan. 1, 2014 at Serenity Ridge for Silent Practice Retreat

This year's annual Winter Retreat at Ligmincha Institute at Serenity Ridge will be a "first" in two different ways: its focus will emphasize practice, and the retreat will be held in an atmosphere of respectful silence that will enable participants to integrate practice into every moment of the day.

During the "Dzogchen Practice Retreat: Turning Inward," Geshe Tenzin Wangyal Rinpoche will present and guide a selection of dzogchen practices as presented in the oral tradition from ancient Bon Buddhist texts. Almost all time with Rinpoche will be spent in meditation and practice. There will be a time for sharing as well as an opportunity to ask questions in the gompa (meditation hall).

Second, this will be the first time a silent retreat has been offered at Serenity Ridge. To create an atmosphere that fully supports turning inward, participants are asked to maintain respectful silence. Space in the lounge will be provided for participants who wish to engage in quiet conversation about their practice. In addition, one table in the dining area will be reserved for those who wish to quietly share their practice with others. Other than these venues, Rinpoche asks that participants observe silence throughout all areas, indoor and outside, at Serenity Ridge.

All are welcome—from those who have completed part or all of the Experiential Transmission series, to those who have done other dzogchen retreats, to those who are exploring dzogchen for the first time. For Rinpoche's students, it will be a wonderful opportunity to process the bounty of teachings that Rinpoche has shared with us over the years, and to become more stable in practice. For new students, the retreat will be an opportunity to participate in a period of intensive meditation and practice that can help you discover the true nature of mind.

Dzogchen, known as the "great perfection," is considered the highest teaching in Tibetan Buddhism. Its fundamental tenet is that reality, including the individual, is already complete and perfect; that nothing needs to be transformed (as in tantra) or renounced (as in sutra) but only recognized for what it truly is.

The retreat will have simultaneous live translation into Spanish. Con traduccion simultaneo al Español en vivo. Para más información comuniquense con la oficina de Ligmincha Institute.
